

What is Woke?

Patrick Reany

3/18/2023

The following statements are how I characterize Wokeness:

Woke is putting down the white race, both in the present and in the past.

Woke is putting down males -- whites first, then all other males.

Woke is an addiction to insincere 'virtue' signaling.

Woke is hyper-sexual-orientation inclusion.

Woke is looking to the past for grievances, rather than to the future for equity.

Woke is ignoring the great progress that has been made towards equal rights and protections under the law for everyone.

Woke is being hypersensitive and constantly searching for something to be offended by.

Woke is sticking your nose into other people's business.

Woke is telling lies about the past to make it more like what you wish it had been, rather than what it actually was.

Woke is to be so hyper-inclusive that we aren't allowed to point out unwise habits or unhealthy tendencies of other people.

Woke is letting minors decide what gender they should be.

Woke is to twist and trash the intellectual property of previous generations to make it 'reflect the world of now', rather than to be faithful to the world as it was expressed by its original authors.

Woke is, in literature and entertainment, more about inclusive representation than about logic or telling compelling and moral stories. It's about checking off checkboxes rather than writing good stories.

Woke is to suck the life out of someone else's established story rather than to write your own fresh story from scratch.

Woke is not keeping the small things small and the big things big.

Woke is the hatred of traditional values and traditional roles.